

MOORING REVERIE.

"It is marvelous how a man like my husband, who prides himself on his tidy appearance, can carry so much hidden dirt. If the edge of his shirt looked as unclean as the bottom of his trousers he'd fly in a rage. And all this nastiness could be avoided if he would use on his shoes, but he won't, and yet he says it is the finest dressing in the world for his horse. Some men are just pig headed, and such is one of them."

Two Ordinances for the Insurance of Bonds.

WHEREAS, by an act of the Legislature of the State of Tennessee, passed at the second session of the Forty-sixth General Assembly of the State on the 31 day of March, 1889, the Board of Mayor and Aldermen of Johnson City, Tennessee, were authorized to appoint some suitable person to open and hold an election in the town of Johnson City to determine whether the legal voters of said town favor the issuance of bonds for the improvement of streets in said town, and to appoint some suitable person to open and hold an election to provide regulations and restrictions for the holding of said election.

Now, therefore, be it ordained by the Board of Mayor and Aldermen of Johnson City, 1st, That Oliver Burleson be and is hereby appointed to open and hold said election at some suitable place in the limits of said corporation.

2d, That said election be held on the 7th day of July, 1890.

3d, That all persons favoring the issuance of bonds for street improvements shall vote a ticket having printed or written thereon: "For bonds for street improvements." All persons not favoring the issuance of bonds shall vote a ticket having written or printed thereon: "Against bonds for street improvements."

4th, That the amount of bonds to be issued under this ordinance, if authorized by a three-fourths vote of legal voters to do so, shall be the sum of $25,000, and that is to be the amount submitted to the qualified voters.

5th, That said bonds shall not be sold for less than par value.

6th, That said bonds shall bear six per cent interest per annum, payable semi-annually.

7th, That said bonds shall run for the period of twenty years.

Passed on first reading May 31, '90.

Passed on second reading June 4, '90.

Passed on third and final reading June 4, '90.

Remarkable Rescue.

Mrs. Michael Curran, Plainfield, Ill., makes the statement that she caught cold, which settled on her lungs; she was treated for a month by her family physician, but grew worse. Her doctor told her she was a hopeless victim of consumption and that no medicine could cure her. Her druggist suggested Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption; she bought a bottle and to her delight found herself benefited from the first dose. She continued its use and after taking ten bottles, found herself sound and well, now does her own housework and is as well as she ever was.—Free trial bottle of this Great Discovery at McFarland & Co's Drug store, large bottles 50c. and $1.00.

A Haunted House.

This body of ours has been likened to a tomb. It often has a haunted apartment—the stomach. Seared by the electric spasm, dyspepsia, digestion flies and refuses to return. What can break the spell, what can raise the ban laid upon the unhappy organs? We answer unhesitatingly, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, and we are warranted in the response by the recorded testimony of myriads, covering a period of over a half a century. A course of the Bitters, taken in any stage of the affliction, and persistently followed, will terminate in cure, positive, not partial. The Bitters restore tone to the epigastrium, remove and purify the juices exuding from the cellular tissue that act upon the food digestively, expel bile from the stomach and the blood, and promote a regular habit of body. Malaria, kidney complaint, nervousness, rheumatism and neuralgia give way to health.

When Baby was sick, we gave her Castoria.

When she was a Child, she cried for Castoria.

When she became Woman, she clung to Castoria.

When she had Children, she gave them Castoria.

WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.

George W. Cheever, D. D.

Rev. Dr. Cheever, a young minister in Salem, Mass., in 1885, published a dream entitled "Deacon Giles' Distillery," which was one of the "most masterly and effective blows ever inflicted on the liquor system up to the date of publication." There were four distilleries, producing six hundred thousand gallons annually, in his immediate vicinity; and of three thousand persons admitted to the workhouse, within a few minutes walk of his study, two thousand and nine hundred were brought there directly or indirectly through intemperance. Over these, and the untold corruption, Sabbath desecration and ruin of souls connected with them, he could not sleep, and if he slept he dreamed "And it was not all a dream." He wrote an article for the Salem Landmark, which was published, and which created an intense excitement. A certain Deacon Jones, who was a distiller, and who also sold Bibles, caused Mr. Cheever to be indicted and tried for "false, scandalous, indecent and malicious libel," and, after a long trial, during which he made an able vindication, he was convicted, fined $1,000, and sentenced to one month's imprisonment. We give the dream in full, as it appeared in the Salem Landmark at the time:

"Inquire at Amos Giles' Distillery."

For the Salem Landmark.

Some time ago the writer's notice was arrested by an advertisement in one of the newspapers, which closed with words similar to the following: "Inquire at Amos Giles' Distillery."

The reader may suppose, if he choose, that the following story was a dream suggested by that phrase.

Deacon Giles was a man who loved money, and was never troubled with tenderness of conscience. His father and his grandfather before him had been distillers, and the same occupation had come to him as an heirloom in the family. The still-house was black with age, as well as with the smoke of furnaces that never went out, and the fumes of tortured ingredients ceaselessly converted into alcohol. It looks like one of Vulcan's stithies translated from the infernal regions into this world. Its stench filled the atmosphere, and it seemed as if drops of poisonous alcoholic preparation might be made to ooze out from any one of its timbers or clapboards at a slight pressure. I was once a treasurer to a Bible society, and he had a little counting room in one corner of the distillery where he sold Bibles.

He that is greedy of gain troubleth his own house. Any one of those Bibles might have told him this, but he chose to learn it from experience. It was said that the worm of the still lay coiled in the bosom of his family, and certain it is that one of its members had drowned himself in a vat of hot liquor, in the bottom of which a skeleton was sometimes after found, with a heavy weight tied to the ankle-bones. Moreover, Deacon Giles' temper was none of the sweetest naturally, and the liquor he drank and the fires and spirituous fumes among which he lived did nothing to soften it. If his workmen sometimes fell into his vats, he himself often fell out with his workmen. This was not to be wondered at, considering the nature of their wages, which, according to no unfrequent stipulation, would be as much raw as they could drink.

Deacon Giles worked on the Sabbath. He would neither suffer the fires of the distillery to go out or to burn while he was idle; so he kept as busy as they. One Saturday afternoon his workmen had quarreled, and all went off in anger. He was in much perplexity for want of hands to do the work of the devil on the Lord's day.

In the dusk of the evening a gang of singular-looking fellows entered the door of the distillery, their eyes glazed, and their language had a line that was awful. They offered to work for the deacon, and he on his part was overjoyed, for he thought within himself that, as they had probably been turned out of employment elsewhere, he could engage them on his own terms.

He made them his indentured offer—as much rum every day when the work was done as they could drink—but they would not take it. Some of them broke out and told him they came from without drinking denunciation in the distillery. And when they said that it seemed to the deacon as if their breath, burned blue; but he was not certain, and could not tell what to make of it. Then he offered them a pittance of money; but they set up such a laugh that they thought the roof of the building would fall in. They demanded a sum which the deacon said he could not give, and would not to the best set of workmen that ever lived, much less to such piratical-looking scoundrels as they. Finally he said he would give them half of what they asked, if they would take two-thirds of that in Bibles. When he mentioned the word Bibles they all looked towards the door and made a step backwards, and the deacon thought they trembled; but whether it was with anger or delirium tremens or something else, he could not tell. However, they winked and made signs to each other, and then one of them, who seemed to be the head man, agreed with the deacon that if he would let them work by night instead of day they would stay with him awhile and work on his own terms. To this he agreed, and they immediately went to work.
